OUR BLOG.. Our Blog. The Story of Spectrasonics. Our World. OUR BLOG..The present invention relates to a rigid container, such as a carton, which provides a convenient place for the storage of small articles and which is designed to minimize the amount of wasted material needed to make the container. In a preferred form, the rigid container of the present invention provides a substantially flat bottomed basket which is useful for storing and transporting a wide variety of small items, particularly such as lip balms and lipsticks. Prior art containers of this type are typically formed from paperboard containers, such as paperboard food cartons. These containers have generally been favored over cardboard and corrugated paperboard containers for several reasons. First, many types of paperboard are recyclable. Paperboard containers having a triangular cross-section are often made from less quality and therefore are more likely to be recycled than containers having a rectangular cross-section, since they are considered to be a greater non-recyclable waste. Additionally, paperboard containers are typically printed on both of their sides, while corrugated paperboard containers are often only printed on their inner walls. Paperboard containers are printed on the exterior walls to permit the container to be printed with promotional material and bar codes to identify the contents of the container. However, the paperboard containers, particularly those having the triangular cross-section, tend to be somewhat uncomfortable to handle since the small corners are easily crushed and also tend to chafe the user's hand. Additionally, paperboard containers tend to be stiff and difficult to bend when being filled, resulting in increased costs. It is well known that such boxes are much less preferred by the public than their cardboard and corrugated paperboard counterparts. Other containers of the prior art, such as those disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,308,626 and 4,833,829 have attempted to overcome these problems and to provide a container which is attractive, easy to handle and convenient to store. These containers include the bottom wall and both ends of the side walls being formed as apertures. When the container is filled the apertures permit air to escape and the bottoms of the containers do not form a flat bottom which creates an unstable container. Further, the apertures tend to weaken the container and, if care is not taken to properly seal the apertures, the container is subject to gas evolution upon heating. Another drawback of
