(RPGFan / Game Watch / video.rocketwotaku.com) "The Elder Scrolls franchise has remained popular for the past decade and this latest iteration, released a few days ago, is no exception. In a surprise announcement, Bethesda announced the release of their fourth Elder Scrolls RPG at their E3 press conference. The long-awaited game, titled The Elder Scrolls Online, is being developed by ZeniMax Online Studios, a division of Bethesda Softworks. Unlike other games in the franchise, this game is being released online instead of on a console, which is quite a change. The Elder Scrolls Online will be an MMO that uses the PC's DirectX 11 API with massively multiplayer combat. There is a 3-D style map in the city of Cyrodiil, which is the world's largest city, with many zones and cities to explore. The combat is RTS style, where players use their mouse to control their character, similar to Dungeons & Dragons Online or World of Warcraft." (GameSpot / 9 / 11 / 2011) "What is it? The Elder Scrolls Online is an MMORPG developed by ZeniMax Online Studios. It brings to the table the Elder Scrolls universe and allows players to explore the vast world of Tamriel through different quests. The gameplay revolves around a first-person perspective, meaning that players will be able to see, in real-time, the world as the main character would see it. It will be released in a two-part set of nine chapters, each comprising two expansions, which will be free. The launch of the first chapter will include a character creation screen with all of the basic choices available, but it's possible that we'll get some more customization options with future patches. The movement, combat, and spellcasting are first-person, but the environments will not only look different (no more gray rocks, I hope), but they'll also feel different, with more natural lighting and rugs." (Eurogamer / 7 / 11 / 2011) "What is it? ZeniMax Online Studios' Elder Scrolls Online is a free-to-play massively multiplayer online role-playing game (MMORPG) that combines elements of real-time strategy, first-person action and fantasy. As you might expect from an Elder Scrolls game, the game is set in a vast world where you'll find towns, dungeons, villages, forests and mountains to explore. You can also team up with three other players to take on a dungeon for the benefit of all

BEIJING (Reuters) - China offered Pakistan a $20 billion, 60-year concession on gas supplies, saying it had brought its own customers under control, state news agency Xinhua reported on Sunday. China's Prime Minister Li Keqiang gave a special one-day briefing to Pakistani politicians, according to the report, as China's relations with President Barack Obama's administration become strained over a strategic waterway dispute and U.S. sanctions on China over cyber attacks. Pakistan, which is already Asia's No. 2 supplier of natural gas, a rarity among its largely impoverished, landlocked neighbours, was among the countries ordered by Obama in June to reduce military aid and cancel projects funded with U.S. aid funds. Pakistan is a key ally of the United States in the war on Islamist militants in neighbouring Afghanistan. China, Asia's biggest supplier of natural gas, announced last month it would cut domestic supplies to Pakistan from April, accusing it of reneging on deals and disrupting supply networks. Pakistan denies the accusations. On Sunday, Xinhua did not say why it was switching on the offer on Monday or when it would enter into force. But it said China had improved its "domestic control" over gas supplies, and that the offer was the longest one on record between the countries. Xinhua said the offer would impose no import duties or buybacks on gas and that it offered "big picture thinking" and a long-term, secure future. On Saturday, Chinese Premier Li Keqiang arrived in Islamabad for meetings with Pakistani Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. Last Wednesday, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry arrived in Islamabad for talks on a deal to have Pakistan reopen a U.S. supply route to Afghanistan that is important for the flow of supplies of economic aid. China, which is building the "western route" across Pakistan to bring natural gas to markets in Europe, wants a quick resolution to the dispute over the $4.5 billion, 1400 km-long, pipeline project. Washington fears it is a route the Islamist militants who have been fighting NATO forces in Afghanistan could use to infiltrate
