One hundred and fifty-two patients with a past history of myocardial infarction received 21 days of antibiotic therapy with doxycycline, 125 patients received the same antibiotic therapy and 47 patients were not treated with antibiotics. On days 3, 7 and 21 after infarction, doxycycline therapy compared to the control group significantly reduced: a) the number of leucocytes and neutrophils, b) the number of T-cells, c) the average level of C-reactive protein.Isolation and characterization of single ciliates (Sulcia) from sewage sludge. The content of single ciliates in microsamples of sewage sludge from different treatment plants was studied. In nine selected samples containing various numbers of ciliates, the species composition of the ciliate community was determined by means of light microscopy and phenetic techniques. The most common ciliates found were Sulcia alata, Acrocnema muscorum, Mesodinium rubrum, Thaumatomonas sp., Metopus sp. and Trachelomonas rigida. The ciliates found in untreated sewage were most often spheroid or stellate
