CAIRO - The U.S. ambassador to Egypt, John Abotadze, is not going to cry after today's terror attack in Sinai's Rafah that left 17 soldiers and three policemen dead, the diplomat told a panel of media at the American Institute for Cairo on Wednesday. In fact, Abotadze said, the U.S. would like to see the country remain a strong military and political force, after the government's downfall in 2011.

"We [the U.S.] see that we all need to come together," he told The Media Line reporter at the U.S. Embassy. That is what he said when asked whether Egypt might have learned from its mistakes following the overthrow of the regime of former president Hosni Mubarak and the subsequent weakness of his successor. Abotadze went on to say that the U.S. understands Egypt's interests, and that it has to find a balance between the interests of the military, the state and the citizens. "The military has to understand that it can't do everything on its own," he said. "It needs to work together with civil society and religious parties, and all Egyptian society to work on these issues, not only in Sinai, but in the rest of the country." Noting 1cdb36666d
