FIFA is EA SPORTS FIFA series of videogames which has been around since 1993. It simulates the worldwide professional association football. There's a full World Cup between 32 countries, and more than 100 national teams to choose from. The game has features like FIFA Ultimate Team, where you build your own team from players you buy. And of course there's the beautiful and complicated English Premier League.

There's FIFA Ultimate Team, where you build your own team from players you buy How does FIFA affect you? I see two ways EA's games affect me. Obviously I'm a busy person and spend a lot of time playing them. Sometimes I get so caught up in the game that I forget my day job, but there's a more serious consequence of playing FIFA. EA is now working with The Diabetes Research Center to see if the game affects blood sugar. It's actually a very small study, but they had diabetic and non-diabetic adults play FIFA for 20 minutes at a time, and had blood glucose measured before, during and after. If it turns out that the game does change your blood sugar, then that would be a serious problem. This is only for the Pro Evolution Soccer 2013 edition, so most of us aren't going to have to worry about this unless we deliberately want to have a low blood sugar FIFA's getting a special edition with The Diabetes Research Center - how should that play with somebody like me, who doesn't have diabetes? This is only for the Pro Evolution Soccer 2013 edition, so most of us aren't going to have to worry about this unless we deliberately want to have a low blood sugar. The PlayStation 3 and Xbox 360 versions of the game still have the problem, but the game has also been patched to eliminate it. How is FIFA important? Football, baseball, ice hockey - I enjoy them all, and I enjoy FIFA because it's the most realistic and most complex sport simulation out there. You can play with realistic teams, you can play with any number of players, you can control any member of the team. There's a lot of innovation in the game and the games engine has a lot of mathematical subtleties that are very exciting, like intelligent AI and an improved match engine that affects the ball and players more realistically than ever before. Of course FIFA is hugely popular because it's fun, but I think it deserves a lot of credit for changing the way
