Nearly two months have passed since President Trump agreed to a "pause" on his plan to reimpose tariffs on billions of dollars worth of Chinese goods, but all that was left was to await a "phase one" trade deal with China. Whether any progress was made during that time has been a bone of contention between the two world powers, with China saying a phase one deal was on the way and the United States saying the opposite. For his part, President Trump initially downplayed the prospects of a deal, saying in November that he expected a "tremendous short period of time" to reach a trade deal with China. On Wednesday, however, the president said that a full trade deal is "progressing very nicely," suggesting that a deal with China is coming "sooner than people would understand." But with no apparent progress made in the intervening months, it appears that Trump is taking back his statement about a deal coming soon. "So, I have to tell you, President Xi said that he wanted to make it," Trump said in an interview with Reuters on Wednesday. "I said, 'No, no, no, no, no.' I said, 'You're not doing that.'" The president added that while a trade deal is "progressing very nicely," it was not on the deadline he put forward, saying it was "not quite there." Whether or not a deal

The main target organisms are mice and voles. The principle of determination is PCR based on mitochondrial DNA (mtDNA) or ribosomal DNA (rDNA) sequences. The first aim is to develop a generic rDNA primer set with which the frequent infection of rodents in the field may be detected.

Primers for multi-species-specific detection of Taenia solium, Echinococcus granulosus, Enterobius vermicularis and Dipylidium caninum (former Taenia sp.) have already been published. Those for E. multilocularis and E. canadensis could also be useful for molecular detection of alveolar echinococcosis (AE) in humans. In addition, primers for a generic E. multilocularis primer set are being developed.

The second aim is to develop a Taenia-specific probe/primer set for PCR or membrane hybridisation in a PCR format. The probe/primer set is designed to detect all five species of Taenia, thereby reducing the risk of missing cross-reactions between Taenia species. The third aim is to investigate a possible direct detection of E. multilocularis larvae, using standard microscopy and PCR techniques in the definitive hosts. A pilot study has been set up for monitoring the epidemiology of AE in
