After a long day out, you probably want to relax and unwind. It will be even better if there is something to watch with your evening. With the help of VLC, you can do just that. One of the best video players out there, VLC lets you perform a bunch of functions that you may want to see in a video. One of the most important ones has to do with the use of subtitles. It comes in handy for those who do not speak English, those who are not of the native language. Subtitles display the text that is spoken on the video, often through a voice-over. People who are not so good at reading may find it easier to watch the video as well as the subtitles at the same time. Smart subtitle support (Text to Speech) One of the most amazing functions that VLC comes with is the Text to Speech (TTS) feature. It enables you to listen to the captions that are displayed on a video or on a picture. The way it works is that there is a pre-made list of words, phrases, and sentences that you can use. You can also create your own list. So, there are two types of captions that you can choose from. One of them is the generic list of captions. This is a really good choice if you are not sure what captions to use. The other type is the list of your own words and sentences. The program will read out these captions for you. Subtitles for many language The list of the supported captions may seem a bit limited. However, you are not stuck with this. There are many languages for which the program features a subtitling (Captions). Thus, it should cover a broad range of languages and dialects. It does not feature the translation for every language. However, some of the common languages include: ● English (American and British) ● French (FR, DE, CA) ● Spanish (ES, AR, MX, PT, US) ● Italian (IT, IT) ● German (DE, DE)
