Click on the link on the page.Q: Why is "this" returning "undefined" instead of the class of the currently focused element on the page? I'm using the Autocomplete plugin to select from a list of some fruits on my site and I am trying to use class names to refer to the currently selected fruit. The problem is that although I can see that jQuery is able to select the right class name, the browser reports that the variable this is undefined. This is a problem because I need the class name in order to run some animations on that element. So my question is: Why can the class name be passed to the variable this but the name of the element can't be? Here is the code I'm using: `var selected = $(this).attr('class'); $(this).addClass(selected); selected.css({ 'animation-duration': '0.5s`

many of whom will be in the UK tomorrow for Christmas - will have tuned into Channel 4's eagerly awaited New Year's Eve broadcast from the BBC's Television Centre at Wood Lane in south London. A "3D" version of the show will be transmitted simultaneously with the main Channel 4 broadcast from 12:30am. It will be the first time that a Channel 4 New Year's Eve has been transmitted simultaneously with a BBC New Year's Eve.

The BBC's main New Year's Eve presentation is based on a couple who have "moved here" and have been given the task of making a big "New Year" speech, played by Tim Rice and Julian Marsh. At the end of the piece, it is announced that, "The Year 2000 arrived in 1994". The Channel 4 team have been working from The Zone - the largest sound stage at the Television Centre - as they prepare to present the United Kingdom's biggest

New Year's Eve programme. Reporter Tom Bradby, and inside man Paul Lowe, were originally assigned to cover the festivities, but have been told that they have been switched to cover the BBC's film of the New Year's fireworks. Trevor Brown, who writes all the programme's promos, will broadcast the Channel 4 part of the programme from a balcony overlooking the crowd, while the BBC's comedians - Robert Downey Jnr, Mark archaeologists use to describe the popular fascination we have for the strange things archaeologists and other academics encounter in the places they study. Although they call it weird, some researchers have indeed understood why they find these things interesting or bizarre. One of the things that make things we find in archaeological sites even more intriguing is the fact that they are not supposed to exist. Similarly, many wild animals we encounter in the natural world are not supposed to be there either. What does it tell us about our own lives when so many of us see these animals and artifacts as intriguing and bizarre? Why are Archaeologists Bizarre? Given that archaeologists are by nature weird, I can see why some of them might see some of the artifacts or fossils they study as bizarre, and that might give one an even better view of humanity and our behavior today. I can also see why some archaeologists might be able to see why most of us are fascinated by things that are not natural in the sense of being common to us, such as the 16,000-year-old artifact that once belonged to someone no longer living. Some archaeologists are afraid of being seen as weird, so they try to think of ways to show that they are not. Every once in a
